Market Review

- The Philippine Stock Exchange Index (PSEi) declined further in April as the ongoing Iran conflict remained unresolved. The PSEi fell 1.9% for the month and closed at 5,833.64.
- A ceasefire announcement between the U.S. and Iran triggered a relief rally that lifted the PSEi back above 6,000. However, the Strait of Hormuz remained closed and oil prices stayed elevated, prompting another sell-off that drove the index lower into month-end.
- The peso also reached a new historic low, breaking past P60:$1. Currency weakness coincided with foreign fund outflows, which added pressure on the PSEi. The peso was 5.1% weaker in March.
- Corporate earnings season began but failed to provide meaningful positive catalysts. Bank earnings were largely in line with expectations, while the property sector continued to struggle.
- Support remains at 5,800. Developments surrounding the reopening of the Strait of Hormuz remain the primary driver for market direction going forward.
